So far the settlement I have seen an reported. Does not correct the problem with microsoft.
You are allowing them to take control of the computer industry. As a example with there next proposed business, expect to see Intuit company the makers of quicken and quickbooks will be the next fallen flag.
As a US consumer, there is nothing in this for me. The harm that microsoft has already done to me is not being corrected.
I have paid for software and them forced to use there software. Example is the browser. Which your settlement does not address.

This whole thing is a joke, The only question that should be considered, is how does the U.S. consumer seek legal action against our government for failing to protect it citizens.

I have worked for over 15 years in the computer industry and have watched microsoft climb to power, by making sure you had to run micorsoft software. I was also a Licensed developed for Digital Research software.
Remember DR-DOS and GEM. One was a better DOS than MS-DOS the latter was a better graphic menu then WINDOWS.
But WINDOWS 3.1 would not run on DR-DOS and GEM would not work with microsoft software apps.
